

Continuing Professional Development Lecture: Does My Patient Have Hearing Loss? How Can I Help?

26 November 2019

Synopsis

One in three people above 65 years old is affected by disabling hearing loss. This lecture will provide an introduction to the topic of hearing loss; its causes, symptoms, and the impact of hearing loss on patients and their family members.

We will discuss some of the common hearing technology and assistive listening devices available today. We will also share useful communication strategies and tips for healthcare professionals when interacting with hearing-impaired patients. Lastly, we will also touch on when and where to refer these patients in the community and tertiary settings.

Speakers

Leem Pei Shan
Principal Audiologist
ENT Centre
Singapore General Hospital

Som Wen Chi
Audiologist
ENT Centre
Singapore General Hospital

Pei Shan and Wen Chi are practicing audiologists at Singapore General Hospital. A bulk of their roles as audiologists is to diagnose hearing loss and work with hearing impaired patients using modern technology. This includes educating patients and family members about hearing loss and addressing misconceptions to provide good outcomes in the rehabilitation process.

Another important part of their jobs is to ensure that children have sufficient access to sounds so that they can develop spoken language. They work closely with auditory-verbal therapists to support and provide holistic care to children with hearing loss and their family.

Target Audience

All allied health professionals, doctors and nurses.
